Another year, another great success for AusNOG03

Sydney 1 September 2009- AusNOG03 (August 31-September 1) proved to be a great success for Australia's community of network operators. Vocus has continued to sponsor the conference into its third year and attendance has soared to over 150 representatives of Australian ISPs cementing its position as a key event in the telecommunications calendar.

AusNOG is the premier event dedicated to raising and debating issues critical to the ISP community. AusNOG03 covered the scope of ISP operations from minute to global, with expert speakers from diverse fields presenting their insights on the local and international telecommunications environments.

Vocus Director Paul Brooks delivered an intriguing presentation on building optical networks with WDM (without burning your fingers). Other popular presentations included Cisco's Lincoln Dale who discussed the evolution of Ethernet and APNIC's Geoff Huston who made an interesting analysis on exactly where we are with IPv6 transition today.

Despite the hectic schedule of the event there was still plenty of time for socialising. Pipe Networks generously encouraged the discussions to continue in a far more relaxed manner on the first night by hosting a tapas style dinner just around the corner at the Museum of Contemporary Arts.
