New CIO for Vocus Communications

Sydney: 22 October 2009 – Telecommunications and technology specialist Len Walter has joined Vocus Communications as CIO.

Following a long stint with Comindico, Soul and TPG, Walter is looking forward to the dynamic and entrepreneurial culture at Vocus.

“Vocus is the most exciting telecommunications company in the industry. They have shaken up the wholesale market and grown at an extraordinary rate. Now’s the time for careful management of that rapid growth to ensure the IT systems are scalable and well integrated into critical areas of the business,” says Walter.

Walter’s role will build on his experience in IT operations and risk management.

James Spenceley, Vocus CEO, recognizes that Vocus is now a mature company that demands dedicated management of its IT systems.

“Len has extensive experience of effectively managing IT systems through periods of rapid business growth, which is ideal for us as we look towards another very busy quarter.”

Vocus is committed to delivering industry leading customer service, and an immediate area of focus for Len will be to synergize our proprietary applications to ensure customers have easy, ongoing access to accurate up-to-date information through the new customer portal,” he added.

Walter’s appointment comes hot on the heels of the Vocus HQ’s move to larger offices to accommodate a fast-growing team of engineers, project managers and support staff. The company is looking to add a further four staff over the next quarter.
